

I remember Poem

By Amity S.G.W.N

I remember,

That morning, which was the earliest I had woken up during my childhood. Pink cake and so many hours of television were quite the treat.

Searching many different neighborhoods for a new house. It was the first time I was going to move. I still had to share a room but it was at least going to be a lot fancier....and scarier. Walking around my elementary school's fields, looking for those "friends" who would always run away when I caught up to them. I eventually stopped following.

The first time I was in a figure skating show. Spinning around the ice in my cute little winter outfit smiling, and feeling completely fabulous.

My middle school's library. There were so many books and light coming in from the windows. The best part were the oh-so-comfy , blue, giant, papasan chair, and the bean bag chairs which were the best places to read.

Intentionally trying to make a sarcastic joke that backfired, got me crying, and the bully smiling.

When my father told us kids we were going to have pets for the very first time. He had found six fuzzy fur balls in our window which had turned out to be the most adorable kittens in the world.

Going to the dinosaur museum and watching mechanic dinosaurs fight. A great learning experience and a nice way to celebrate my tenth birthday.

Spending many hours trying to beat every Mario and Sonic game I could on my game boy. This is probably when I began to be a gamer, but I didn't know that.

I remember my childhood. Which contained my favorite memories and most of my happiness.
